

2019 Year in Review

It's been an exciting and challenging year — and there's much more to come.

Few other times in the history of the Philadelphia Museum of Art have been as challenging or as full of promise as the past year. As we write this, we are entering final construction of the Core Project, the name we have given to the second, and without doubt the most complicated, phase of our facilities master plan. Although much remains to be done before the project is completed next fall, we can discern the shape of things to come and the many ways in which the changes now being made will benefit our visitors.

Over the past twelve months we have opened a new restaurant and café and, in the bargain, renovated an entire section of the museum that was long past due for a makeover. Work also proceeded on the transformation of two additional wings on the Lower Level that will display American art, prints, drawings, photographs, and modern and contemporary art, providing additional galleries for important areas of our collection. Finally, we have nearly completed the transformation of the grand space that for many years served, incongruously, as our loading dock, but now serves as an entrance, providing street-level access to the museum on the side of the building that faces Kelly Drive. And there's more to come in the year ahead.

Looking back, it is helpful to remind ourselves that we have not closed the museum, even briefly, during the process, but rather kept it open and in operation. This has not been an easy task, but it has been a rewarding one. We have managed to keep our entire staff on board, which would not have been possible had we gone dark. This, in turn, has allowed us to continue to offer a full schedule of exhibitions and programs. The response from our audiences continues to be encouraging: this past year we welcomed over 773,000 visitors, just 20,000 shy of our attendance in the year prior to the start of the Core Project.

A good deal of credit for this success is due to our staff and the many creative ways in which they utilize our most important resource: the museum's exceptional collection. It served as the basis for several popular exhibitions in the Dorrance Galleries, including Fabulous Fashion: From Dior's New Look to Now, which attracted more than 173,000 visitors, and The Impressionist's Eye, seen by nearly 208,000 visitors. Fulfilling an important goal of our 2013 strategic plan, we also continued the renewal of spaces in which we display our collection on an ongoing basis. Evidence of this can be seen in our newly renovated galleries of Chinese art—which opened in February and have proven to be enormously popular with the public—and in the work now being done on our galleries of late nineteenth century European painting, sculpture, and decorative arts, scheduled to be completed by the beginning of the new year. Judging from the responses we received, the care we are giving to the presentation and interpretation of our collection is one of the most important keys to engaging new audiences. Simply put, it is what people come to the museum to see, and it is our responsibility to make that experience as memorable as possible.

Of the many memorable exhibitions of the past year, several stand out—most notably Long Light: Photographs by David Lebe and Souls Grown Deep: Artists of the African American South—because they enabled us to share some recently acquired works of art with our visitors and foster an appreciation of the ongoing development of our collection. In this regard, the past year was exemplary. Among the highlights that have come to the museum by purchase or gift are two views of the new waterworks on the Schuylkill River just below Fairmount, the present site of the museum, painted in 1826 by the celebrated American artist Thomas Doughty, a splendid drawing of the dead Christ (1834) by noted French painter Paul Delaroche, and a wonderful group of paintings and works on paper by American modernists such as Arthur Dove, Marsden Hartley, and Georgia O’Keeffe that have come to us from trustee Charles Williams.

Just as important has been our care of the collection. From packing and shipping to registration and art handling, this work takes place mostly behind the scenes and its value, therefore, is rarely acknowledged. Equally significant, but perhaps more visible, are the activities of our conservators, who are asked to contribute to a number of significant projects. Among these last year were the cleaning and repair of many of the objects included in the reinstallation of our galleries of Chinese art, the restoration of painting and furniture for our new galleries of early American art, and the conservation of one of our great masterpieces, Pierre-Auguste Renoir’s Great Bathers (1884–87).

A sustained commitment to programming continues to be a hallmark of our work and one of the principal reasons we have not only enjoyed robust attendance, but also engaged our audience.

This has meant designing ways to attract those who are our future—families and young adults—to connect through programs like Art Splash and special events like the Def Poetry Reunion, and an evening with poet and musician Patti Smith in conjunction with the citywide celebration of the 200th anniversary of Walt Whitman’s birth. With collaborations like the new pilot program Sherlock, designed to help middle school students develop critical thinking skills, we are also redefining how the museum can increase its value as a partner to the educational community.

In retrospect, we can say that much was accomplished by a dedicated staff with the encouragement of a committed Board of Trustees and the support of a donor community whose generosity has been steadfast and, in a word, remarkable. Best of all, we can also say that there is much more to come.

Samuel S. Fleisher Art Memorial, Inc.

The Fleisher Art Memorial is a source of inspiration, creativity, and community. Every year, more than 20,000 adults and children experience the transformative power of art by participating in studio art classes, exhibitions, and community-based programming. Through all of its work, Fleisher strives to make art accessible to everyone, regardless of economic means, background, or artistic experience. While Fleisher is an independent 501(c)3 with its own executive director and board of directors, the Museum has provided administrative oversight since 1944, under a testamentary agreement with the Estate of Samuel S.
